

Ethical dilemmas in front of me

1. Following my dream V/s family responsibility
2. Stable career at MNC v/s unpredictability of exam
3. Following heart instinct v/s following well-wishers advise
4. Allegation about corrupt IPS v/s elite life as IPS.
5. Bond in MNC v/s age over for exam.
6. Self-satisfaction v/s family satisfaction.

Options available to me

1. Joining MNC by accepting job offer.

Pros: will clear my liabilities, Family will be happy & fulfilled responsibilities to family.

Cons: Never gets self-satisfaction, possible depression and mental suffering for leaving dream.

2. Rejecting offer from MNC and prepare for exam.

Pros: Self-satisfaction pursuing dream, more chances of clearing exam.

Cons: Failure as a family man, Uncertainty in exam, No money for education, leaving parents in utter distress due to my action, Family unhappy.

3. Joining MNC after negotiating Bond conditions (as I have excellent academics) and continues preparation with job.

Pros: Can solve economic issues in short term, Can full fill my dream in long term as I can pay compensation to company later.

Cons: Chances of low perks and promotions due to negotiations.

4. Searching for other job and keep preparing for exam.

Pros: Dream remains safe, Freedom without bond, solving financial problems eventually with low salary.

Cons: No assurance of job, extra pressure on finding a job, No money for family and education if getting job delayed.

So considering merit of the options I prefer 3rd option to join MNC after negotiations to fulfill my dream. If they accept tenure or compensation for resigning, then I will join there.

If they don't accept negotiations on bond, I will go for option 4.
